Motive Unknown In Kalamazoo Shootings; Suspect To Be Arraigned

(NPR) Authorities in Kalamazoo, Mich., are piecing together clues from a weekend shooting spree. At least six people are dead after multiple shootings in three different locations in the area on Saturday night. Police arrested 45-year-old Jason Dalton for the crime. He worked as an Uber driver — and may have logged some hours on Saturday, according to local reports. In addition to those killed, two other people were also shot; a woman standing outside her apartment building who is expected to survive, and a 14-year-old girl reported to be in critical condition. Several hundred people attended a vigil Sunday night that was held by local churches, according to Rick Pluta of Michigan Radio. Pluta also reports that Dalton is scheduled to be arraigned on Monday. "Authorities could not say what they believed motivated him to target victims with no apparent connection to him or to each other," The Associated Press reports. At a news conference Sunday morning, Kalamazoo County Prosecutor Jeffrey Getting said officials believe the attacks were random, with bullets striking people who happened to be in the wrong place when the rampage started. When asked whether he viewed the violence as an act of terrorism, Getting said no. The victims range from four women who were shot in the parking lot of a Cracker Barrel restaurant to a father and son who were at a car dealership, according to local news TV WWMT. Calling the shootings "a senseless act of violence," Gov. Rick Snyder has ordered state buildings to fly the state and U.S. flags at half-staff for the next six days, to honor the six who died. Kalamazoo Public Safety Chief Jeff Hadley says Michigan police arrested Dalton and they believe he alone is responsible for the killings. Earlier, based on descriptions drawn from surveillance video and eyewitness statements, police said they were looking for a white man in his 50s, driving a blue Chevrolet HHR. On Sunday, reports emerged that Dalton may have been a driver for Uber — and the ride-hailing service has now confirmed to NPR that that is indeed the case, and that Dalton, who police have said did not have a criminal record, had passed the company's background check.

U.S. urges wider challenge to China's claims in South China Sea

(Reuters) Australia and other countries should follow the U.S. lead and conduct "freedom-of-navigation" naval operations within 12 nautical miles of contested islands in the South China Sea, a senior U.S. naval officer was reported as saying on Monday. Vice Admiral Joseph Aucoin, the commander of the U.S. Navy's Seventh Fleet, is in Australia for high-level talks with defense leaders and has discussed growing concerns over Beijing's military expansion in the disputed region, the Australian Broadcasting Corporation (ABC) reported. China claims most of the South China Sea, through which more than $5 trillion in global trade passes every year and which is believed to have huge deposits of oil and gas. Vietnam, Malaysia, Brunei, the Philippines and Taiwan have rival claims. Beijing has been angered by air and sea patrols the United States has conducted near islands China claims. Those have included one by two B-52 strategic bombers in November and by a U.S. Navy destroyer that sailed within 12 nautical miles of Triton Island in the Paracels group last month. Aucoin told reporters it would be "valuable" if Australia and others sent warships to conduct similar operations within 12 nautical miles of disputed territories. "What we're trying to ensure is that all countries, no matter size or strength, can pursue their interests based on the law of the sea and not have that endangered by some of these actions," Aucoin said, according to the ABC. "It's up to those countries, but I think it's in our best interests to make sure that those sea lines remain open, I'll leave it at that," he said. Tensions between China and its neighbors have risen further since Taiwanese and U.S. officials said last week Beijing had placed surface-to-air missiles on Woody Island, part of the Paracels archipelago it controls. Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull last week urged claimants to refrain from island-building and militarization in the South China Sea.

Eureka Weather:

A weakening front will bring light rain to portions of Northwest California through this evening. A drying and warming trend is expected early next week as high pressure rebuilds.

Reno Weather:

High pressure will strengthen over the Sierra and Western Nevada, bringing dry conditions through the work week. Above average temperatures today will ease down to near average Tuesday, then jump to well above average for Wednesday through Friday. The next chance for light precipitation will be Saturday.

Sacramento Weather:

Expect dry weather with above average daytime temperatures this week with some patchy morning valley fog.

San Francisco Weather:

A warming trend will begin to take place today and persist through midweek as high pressure builds along the West Coast. Dry weather conditions will also prevail through at least late week before a weak weather system approaches northern California Friday night into Saturday.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY:

Hanford Weather:

Dry weather will continue for the next several days as a ridge of high pressure dominates the pattern. Except for areas of night and morning low clouds and fog in the San Joaquin valley...skies will be mostly clear through Thursday. A warming trend is expected through midweek with high temperatures averaging well above normal by Tuesday.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

The warming trend will continue through Tuesday as offshore flow combines with building high pressure aloft. An approaching low pressure system will allow onshore flow and a cooling trend to develop later this week into next weekend.

Extreme Southwestern California including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

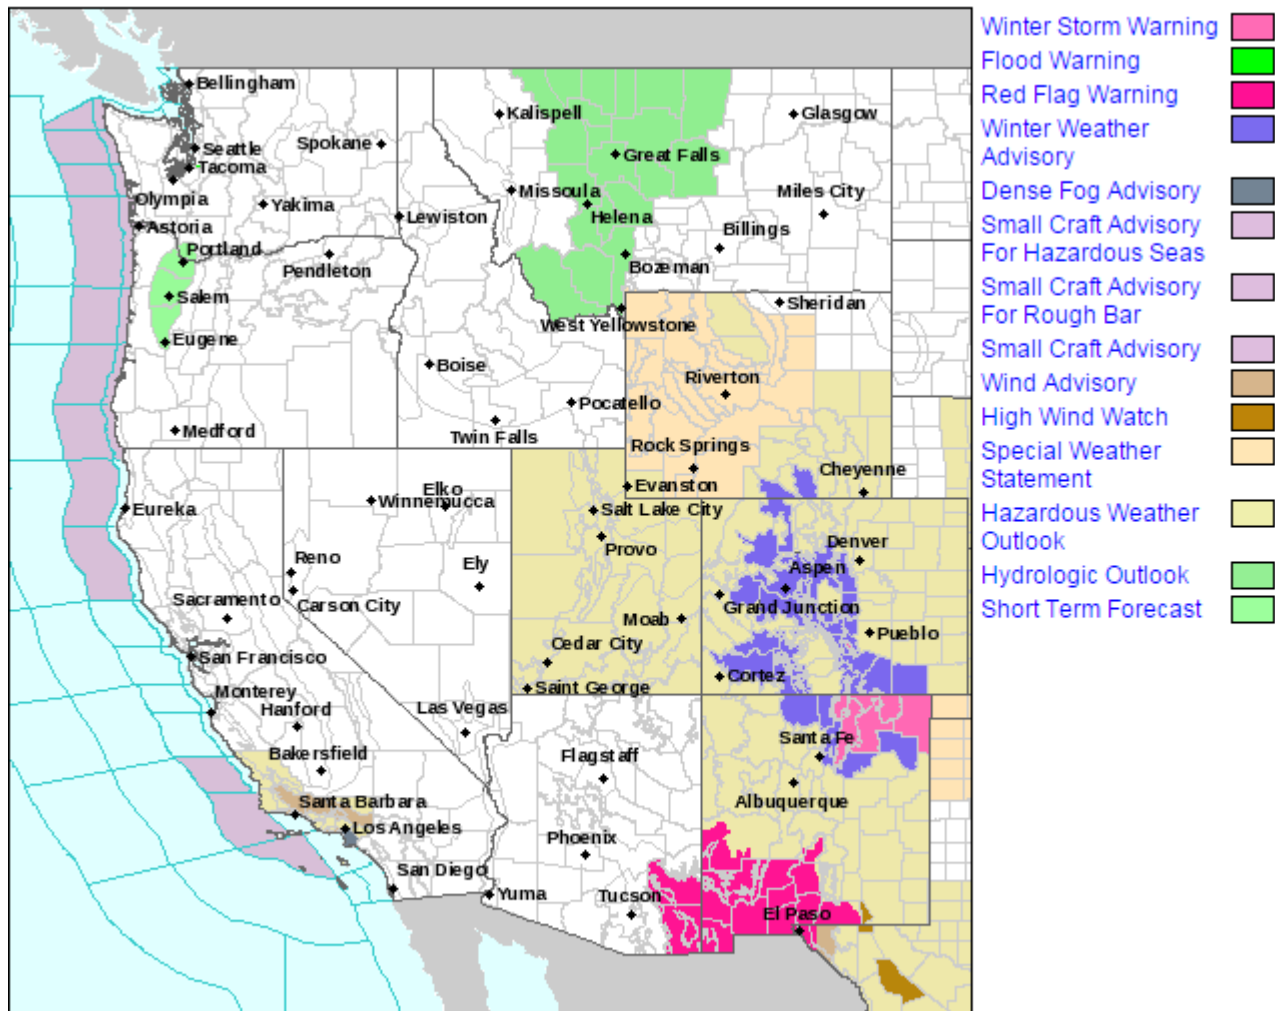

It will be fair and warmer this week as a ridge of high pressure dominates the weather pattern. A shallow marine layer will bring areas of low clouds and fog along the coast this morning. Gusty Northeast winds will develop through and below the passes and canyons and near the coastal foothills at times today through Wednesday. The warm days will continue through Friday before a low pressure trough arrives Saturday with cooler weather.

Southeast California Weather:

Another unseasonably warm day is in store but a dry cool front will lead to windy conditions by this afternoon. Behind the front temperatures will be significantly cooler Tuesday with highs on the lower deserts dipping below 80. Breezy to windy conditions continue Tuesday and Wednesday. High pressure rebuilds for warmer temperatures Thursday and Friday. High pressure will weaken next weekend but with only modest cooling anticipated.
